Two-day seminar on

Climate Change, Prevention, Adoption and Sustainable Development in Coastal West Bengal

A. Aim

The aim of this seminar is to provide a comprehensive understanding of climate change and its multifaceted impacts on the coastal regions of West Bengal. It focuses on examining climate-induced challenges such as sea-level rise, coastal erosion, increased frequency of cyclones, flooding, and salinity intrusion, which significantly affect coastal ecosystems and the socio-economic conditions of local communities. The seminar aims to explore prevention and mitigation measures, including policy frameworks, technological interventions, and ecosystem-based approaches, alongside adaptation strategies adopted by coastal populations. Furthermore, it seeks to highlight the role of sustainable development practices in enhancing climate resilience, safeguarding livelihoods, and ensuring balanced environmental and economic growth. By integrating scientific insights, community-based practices, and policy perspectives, the seminar aims to promote informed decision-making and long-term sustainability in coastal West Bengal.

B. Objective

This seminar aims to develop a comprehensive understanding of the nature and drivers of climate change and their specific impacts on the coastal regions of West Bengal, including critical challenges such as sea-level rise, coastal erosion, increased frequency of cyclones, flooding, and salinity intrusion. It seeks to examine existing prevention and mitigation measures implemented at local, regional, and policy levels, as well as to analyze adaptation strategies adopted by coastal communities to cope with climate variability and extreme events. The seminar further highlights the role of sustainable development practices in strengthening coastal resilience, safeguarding livelihoods, and ensuring long-term socio-economic and environmental stability. Additionally, it assesses the contribution of government initiatives, community participation, and technological interventions in climate resilience planning. In alignment with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals, the seminar particularly contributes to SDG 13 (Climate Action) through climate risk reduction and adaptation strategies, SDG 11 (Sustainable Cities and Communities) by promoting resilient coastal settlements, SDG 14 (Life Below Water) through the protection of coastal and marine ecosystems, and SDG 1 (No Poverty) by emphasizing livelihood security and community resilience in climate-vulnerable coastal regions.
